

FROM THE MESSENGER OF 1-9-1917: PETTY SESSIONS.

Market Gardeners' Squabble. Henry Crawford, Market Gardner, of Broad Street was summoned by Elijah Troth, Market Gardener, Broad Street for using obscene language in Broad Street on August 22nd and also with using threats towards Troth. Clara Crawford daughter-in-law of the defendant also charged Troth with using obscene language at the same time and place. Mr. G.W. Hobson appeared for Troth and Mr J.S. Pritchett for the Crawfords. At the outset Mr Hobson said if Crawford would undertake not to interfere with Troth in the future his client would agree to the withdrawal of the summonses. Mr. Pritchett replied that he had had a serious conversation with his client upon that suggestion but he was not inclined to take any course that might be thought to be an admission that he was in the wrong, and it was decided to go on with the cases. Troth stated that on August 22nd he attended a sale of fruit at Hanbury and had some unpleasantness with the defendant's son, resulting in a fight, which however he regarded as an end to the dispute. He admitted he had the worst of it. He returned to Bromsgrove about 8.30 and drove straight to his farm to cut chaff. He was accompanied by a boy named Smith who worked for him and in order to get to his farm he had to pass the house of Crawford's son. He cut his chaff and returned home, in order to do which, he had to again pass the son's house and also Crawford's premises. As he passed the son's house, defendant, who was there, shouted to him to stop, and used most filthy language and also threatened to cut his entrails out. Witness urged on his horse and defendant followed him for some distance. He was afraid defendant would do him some bodily harm. Cross-examined: he did not get out of his float, and did not stop at Crawford's house or his son's. – Edward Smith(14) who works for Troth gave corroborative evidence as to what occurred and Joseph Gossage, 53 Broad Street, cycle maker, also deposed that Crawford used very bad language and ran after the trap for some distance. He did not hear Troth make use of any bad language at all, and he did not stop at Crawford's house. - The defence was that it was Troth who used the bad language, and Crawford swore that Troth stopped his horse at defendant's son's house and began to speak about the fight at Hanbury but witness told him to go on home, as he wanted nothing to say about it. He denied that he used any bad language or any threats, and asserted that Troth was the offender. Neither did he run after Troth's cart. – A number of witnesses- Mrs Clara Crawford, Walter Stanton, Daisy Crawford, William Handy, and G. Troth were called in support of Crawford's statement.- After hearing their evidence, the Chairman said it was difficult to decide a case in which so many witnesses had been called and who told different stories of what occurred. Both the charges of bad language the Bench would dismiss, and of the charge of threats Crawford would be bound over to keep the peace against Troth for six months in a sum of £10.00, and would have to pay the costs, 18/6d.
